

Alison Bateman-House, PHD, MPH, MA, is an Assistant Professor in the Division of Medical Ethics at New York University Langone Medical Center. She has advanced training in bioethics, public health, and history, and she specializes in the ethics and history of human subjects research and the ethics and history of public health. She has published in such journals as Annals of Internal Medicine, American Journal of Public Health, the Hastings Center Report, and Public Health Ethics.

Alison Bateman-House serves as the non-voting, nonpaid deputy chairperson of the Compassionate Use Advisory Committee (CompAC), an external, expert panel of internationally recognized medical experts, bioethicists, and patient representatives formed by NYU School of Medicine, which advises the Janssen division of Johnson and Johnson about requests for compassionate use of some of its investigational medicines.

She also co-chairs the NYU School of Medicine Working Group on Compassionate Use and Pre-Approval Access.